David Drab serves as Principal and Security Thought Leader for Xerox Global Services, where he collaborates with the company's business units to develop security solutions for a wide range of clients. Xerox Global Services brings real-world experience to clients, helping them measurably improve document-driven processes, making their business more efficient and secure. Drab is a 32-year law enforcement veteran including 27 years with the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Drab joined Xerox in October 2002. He and his team are charged with understanding the client's unique security requirements and identifying innovative technologies, solutions, and services, which are then effectively integrated into Xerox business solutions to strengthen security, compliance, and corporate intelligence. Solutions secure data, documents, and content across complex workflows of the global enterprise while at the same time assuring conformity to the security management principals of ISO 27001 - The Code of Practice for Information Security.

Before joining Xerox, Drab served in the FBI's Cleveland Division, where he investigated organized crime, foreign counter-intelligence, and terrorism. He spearheaded the division's economic espionage program and successfully investigated the first case resulting in an indictment under the Economic Espionage Act of 1996, in which foreign government sponsorship was charged. He also delivered numerous security briefings to corporate executives on a broad range of threats including organized crime, terrorism, and national security.

He has a Bachelor of Science degree in criminal justice from American University in Washington, D.C. He is a member of the Information Systems Security Association (ISSA), Computer Security Institute (CSI), and the American Society of Industrial Security (ASIS).

Drab is a Certified Information System Security Professional (CISSP), credential issued by ISC² (International Information Systems Security Certification Consortium) and holds a Security+ professional certification from CompTIA.
